The claim, there is no us and them anymore, has become a reality. We live in a global community: the COVID-19 pandemic has made this clear to most of us. How we meet the challenge of this transition to a planetary society, however, remains open. A global approach to social responsibility and social justice, and the evolution to a broader social solidarity are yet to be realized—or even imagined. How do we, as healthcare practitioners, consider an expansion of our responsibilities to embrace the entire world? This question forms the basis of the presentation, without any promise of an answer being provided.
