

Raised in the rural countryside of St. Lucia, Glenice Deterville witnessed the interconnectedness of policy, development, and rurality. She conducted a study on women harnessing their collective powers to lobby their government as changemakers in their local communities. Glenice is a policy analyst within the Ministry of Agriculture for the Government of Saskatchewan and PhD student in Public Policy at the University of Regina. A dedicated educator, she is advancing the field of rural and community development, and supporting the future generation of rural researchers.
