A century of learning the business of life
BY SARAH PRATT

As Home Economics and Human Ecology mark 100 years, we highlight two women who share a passion for home, family and community

The early 20th century was a time of burgeoning opportunity for women. In 1918, the same year most Canadian women were granted voting rights, the University of Alberta established the Department of Household Economics.

For women who went through the program, it became their entry into higher education and professional opportunities.

For Catherine Ellis, ’63 BSc(HomeEc), it was the science of nutrition that led to university.

“I was always fascinated by how food became us,” says Ellis. “How, if you eat various things, they turn into skin and bone and such.”

After majoring in food and nutrition and completing her dietetic internship, Ellis worked as a district home economist and a public health nutritionist before becoming a grain farmer in Olds, Alta., with her husband, Graham.

In the 30-odd years since, Ellis has seen many changes in farming: no-till systems, GPS, cellphones. When she thought about how to help prepare tomorrow’s farmers, she decided to arrange a gift of life insurance to the U of A.
Gift of Registered Retirement Funds

You work hard to prepare for your retirement and many of you have built up significant savings through registered saving instruments. While saving for your retirement has become an essential part of a complete financial plan, your strategy ought to consider how and when to transfer these RRSP/RRIF accumulations once it is no longer feasible to keep them. The concept of transferring registered savings to the University of Alberta as a gift becomes a viable strategy once you consider the significant benefits:

• Simple to arrange through naming the University of Alberta as a beneficiary or alternate beneficiary on a change of beneficiary form from your financial institution.
• Tax credits for donor’s estate can effectively eliminate the taxes due on the disposition of the RRSP/RRIF on the final tax return and potentially on the previous return.
• Gift is not subject to probate.
• You can designate the area you would like to support.
• You will become a member of the Quaecumque Vera Honour Society, our special donor recognition society.

she chose to help students continue their education.

The oldest of four children raised on a farm north of Lloydminster, Sask., Gardner recalls the day her father brought home a Singer Featherweight sewing machine — it didn’t take long for Gardner to figure out how to use it.

Her years as a 4H member and high school home economics classes led Gardner down a natural path into the U of A’s Household Economics program.

And the lessons she learned there have lasted a lifetime — both professionally and personally. She taught home economics for more than 30 years, is an acrylic and watercolour artist, a baker whose pastries and pies are beloved, and a seamstress of intricately embellished garments.

While reviewing her will a few years ago, Gardner decided she wanted to give back to the place that gave her so much.

As a university student, she was turned down for scholarships because she didn’t qualify on financial grounds, so she decided to create the Dorothy (Cowan) Gardner Bursary in Human Ecology to help students struggling with costs.

“I hope this bursary means students can have an education they might not otherwise get,” says Gardner, who hopes to reconnect with her alma mater during the September 2018 Alumni Weekend.

“Home economics and the University of Alberta gave me a great background for my career as a home economics teacher.”

Both Gardner and Ellis say their education played an important role in shaping their lives, and their decision to give back to the university will help ensure other students can continue their own journeys.

A few facts about Home Ec

• The Department of Household Economics was established in 1918 under the Faculty of Arts and Science.
• In 1945, the school first offered a master’s degree in Household Economics Education. In 1960, postgraduate programs in nutrition were established.
• Throughout its history, the department has responded to the concerns and interests of the day. In 1918, household science was highly regarded. During the 1920s, nutrition was of great importance. During the Depression, food preservation became crucial, while after the Second World War, materialism swept households. From the 1970s to today, science and research are once again at the forefront.
• Today, the Department of Human Ecology & Home Economics offers two undergraduate fields: Clothing, Textiles & Material Culture and Family Science. It also offers the only PhD degree program in human ecology in Canada.
WE WOULD LIKE TO HEAR FROM YOU
